

Abstract

The United States and its political movement were focused on securing their interests in the Middle East. They focused on establishing a wide network of diverse and interrelated relations in various fields and on many levels. Many of these relations were based on the adoption of interrelated economic, political and security agreements. Which has evolved with the development of the United States in its economic, military and technical capabilities, and the consequent change in its view of the "isolation policy" it has left the international community, to indulge completely in international affairs, and a frequent attempt to strengthen relations and develop in various forms and forms with The governments of the countries that met with the will of the US, little or very many different considerations, to secure their interests and strategic objectives, especially in the Middle East, and in times of crisis and when necessary to find political arrangements and security and economic required by the interest to maintain the status quo Turkey is one of those countries that have entered into many different relations with the United States, as well as alliance with them within the framework of "NATO", in an effort to ensure its security and to achieve some of its interests and targets regionally and internationally.